Sandy:

You know that I am a fine lawyer. You tell the world so on your web site. You told Mayor Koch so. One of these days, you may even refer me to a fine, paying client or two.

The question is not when or if the state is going to pay you. The question that I am embarrassed to face at every partner meeting for nearly 2 years is: When are you going to respect me enough to pay me? Or are you having fun playing me the fool? I am quite certain that never in your life have you allowed anyone to treat you as you have treated me on this issue. I am not a bank. If I were, I would have called on a letter of credit a year ago.

All of my other clients appreciate my professionalism and pay in less than 60 days. Always. All of them.

I am not going to ask you again. I should never have had to ask once in the first place.

Answer, please.

John
